HEALTH NOTICE.

To the Citizens of Bangor:

THE State has provided that certain measures shall be observed in order to secure the health of the inhabitants. Among those measures are the removing of filth, and foul and noisome substances, and all things manifestly unhealthy, from the premises of citizens. Permit me to suggest to you—

1st—To examine your cellars, particularly their condition in regard to ventilation, dampness, decaying vegetables, and all other filthy substances.

2d—See if drains, privy offenses, &c., are kept free from standing pools of water or impure matter.

3d.—Examine your pails for said vaults. If they are filthy, rusty or leaky, or smell badly, have them repaired and disinfectants put into them for your safety and comfort.

4th—See if sinks are discharging and keeping sweet and clean, and attend to them at your own proper cost.

5th—See if there is any publican-house in your neighborhood, such as often occasion disorderly, riotous, and tumultuous assemblies, and if so, report the same to the City Marshal.

6th—See if any drains, cesspool, privy, stable, or hog-pen is a nuisance to your health, or that of your neighbors.

By attending to and carrying out the above suggestions you will confer a favor on the public, and a benefit on yourself.

WARD'S

Patent Grapple.

THIS GRAPPLE WAS INVENTED BY

Moses N. Ward,

OF BANGOR,

And was patented December 8th, 1868.

IN STRENGTH, SIMPLICITY, and FACILITY of operation, it is far superior to any thing of the kind ever offered.

It is wonderful in its action in every form of old iron to which it is sought to be applied. Takes a firm hold of flat bars, hooks, chains, links, with equal readiness.

No Mill, no Vessel, no Store nor Store House, should be without it.

It is indispensable to every ship builder, and every ship builder knows it. Also, that Grapple is invaluable to owners of vessels, being so simple, it is not liable to get out of order.

All persons desiring to purchase the right to manufacture and sell, can obtain the same by calling at the store of the manufacturer.

EVENING DISPATCHES

FROM WASHINGTON

New York, May 13

The Times' Washington special dispatch says:

Hon. Benj. F. Wade went to-day and got his commission as Governor of the Dakota territory, which Pres. Johnson issued just before retiring from office. Wade is a warm personal friend of General Grant's, and will have no fear of the Senate refusing to confirm his appointment.

Quite a number of Representatives and Senators have again made their appearance on the floor during the past few days, probably to fix things ready for the Summer. Among them are Senators Chandler of Michigan, Hopkins of Pennsylvania, Wright and Ex-Representative Woodward of New York, Tyner of Ohio, Starkweather of Connecticut, Clerk of Kansas, and others.

Hon. Geo. Walker, of Springfield, Mo., is here on a brief visit.

The Alabama Claims

London, May 13. London, May 12. The Queen to-day received in audience Hon. Hugh McCulloch, the American Minister, who presented the letter of recall from President Johnson, and a letter from President Grant, accrediting the appointment of Reverdy Johnson as Minister to England, in the room of Mr. McCulloch, resigned.

The Queen has appointed to-morrow as the day for the ceremony.

Sprague in the Role of a Democrat.

If there was before any doubt as to the Democratic identity of Sprague, that doubt is surely dispelled now. At a public meeting in Philadelphia he said:

"Ask salutary warning, let those who wield and control the resources and government of the country in the interest of the few, bear in mind that of the historic character of the latent power always residing in the people, which, when their reasonable demands are met with ridicule and resistance invariably wields the forth and axe with irresistible force to accomplish desired reforms."

When the Democracy failed at the ballot box in 1860, they flew to "the torch and the axe" to accomplish what they considered "desired reforms": what they constantly need and beyond the voluntary enlistments and resorted to draft again the Democrats in certain sections took up "the torch and the axe": when reconstruction did fail to give the whole country peace, the Democrats of the South seized the torch and the axe. The result in all these cases was and ever will be invariably the same, because "desired reforms" were stolen liveries in which to serve anarchy and crime; the people suffered punishments which always follow such scenes, while the adroit leaders escaped. History only to be studied to fully all its lesson, but history to be lived now, or else in the beacon of the Heroes and its victims. Poll a man that certain counselors and certain counselors are pernicious, and are treacherous and the credit be given it, may depend upon his credulity; let a man suffer or let a man prosper by heeding or avoiding such counsel, and he cannot soon forget it. It takes no scholar and no historian in this country to know that every lawless, riotous demonstration against Government recoils upon the heads of its actors. The people of the North and of a good part of the South have repudiated the Democratic leaders who have so long undertaken to guide them by false beacons. And now in the face of history, in the teeth of experience, Sprague espouses a cause that has just been buried, under the ruins of the Confederacy; he says "stoneboy" to the ignorant masses in the great cities, when he can no longer command the respect of respectable people; he combines the crazy fanaticism of Vallandigham with the hot headed zeal for power of Frank Blair; to the people who have not yet forgotten the evils of that latent power always residing in the people, which, when their reasonable demands are met with ridicule and resistance invariably wields the forth and axe with irresistible force to accomplish desired reforms."

This is Democracy, but it is not popular where popularity is worth anything; it is potorgety, but it is not success. It is an unfortunate day for anyman when he deliberately throws himself into the political maelstrom and seeks companionship in the multitude of associations wrecks. Sprague does worse than this. He dives to the very bottom of the Democratic whirlpool; he seeks to stir up the dormant passions of evil to drag others down after him. But the people have learned better than their assumed teacher. He will be spurned. He is merely seeking his own moral and political doom.

When a political party surrenders its identity into one powerful, vital part, like a man with partial paralysis, its decay has commenced. Its recovery is out of the question. This is the position of the Democracy in Virginia, one of the strongholds of that political heresy. Virginia has been one of the fields upon which Democracy has looked with pride, and Richmond has been its Mecca. But alas, even Richmond has proved unsound in the ancient faith of Democracy; it refused to sustain that rampant fire eating organ, the Southern Opinion; and now the whole State is in a condition very approaching to the Italian Kingdom of the last dutch. The Democracy have not the courage to put a ticket into the field under their own banner, but they sail under the colors of a conservative Republican organization. They have no longer the courage to face a square encounter. They have no confidence in the people, who have so repeatedly declined to place confidence in them. They surrender their distinct ideas, and they merge themselves with a body of men whom they hope to find a little nearer the hearts of the people than they have been. In any result of the Virginia election the Democracy are defeated. The success of the ticket they advocate would not be their success. So the disintegration of the great Democratic party has commenced in Virginia, and it will extend to other parts like contagion. This process has been going on for months. Would Vallandigham wish to candidate with Democrats and Johnson Republicans but for a weakness incurable in the party? Would the World, the Post, and the smaller Democratic papers in Maine follow suit in their appeals to the Democratic organization to let in all moderate Republicans if the Democratic name were not losing its charm? The Democracy of Maine may as well be putting their estates in order, for about all there is left to them now is a very mean legacy of political failure.

The United States is to act as arbitrator in a dispute between Great Britain and Portugal as to which power has the right to exercise sovereignty over the province of Bolama on the western coast of Affica. This dispute was commenced in 1831, and was continued until last January, when a convention was signed at Lisbon by which the contracting powers agreed to submit their differences to the United States. Mr. Seward accepted the arbitratorship in February last, and President Grant will now have to select an arbitrator to the arguments and to prepare a decision. General Cushing is regarded as eminently qualified for the position.

Freeman H. Morse, who was a representative from the Bath District of Maine, in the 37th, 38th and 39th Congress, was appointed Consul General at London, in 1861, by President Lincoln, and has now been reappointed by request of the Maine delegation.

We have noticed the foregoing on the rounds of New England newspapers. As we understand it, the Maine delegation not only did not request Mr. Morse's re-appointment, but, with a single exception, both Senators and Representative earnestly protested against the re-appointment, and claimed that the value of their place should be bestowed upon Maine in another form and in other places. We think they were right. Mr. Morse has had the office for eight years; commencing his term before the war, and that was long enough. The men who mingled in the war, and the young men of Maine, who have borne the brunt of battle for our politics, were much better entitled to the favors of the Administration, than one whose labors in the party almost antedate the recollection of our active men, and who has for so long a period enjoyed the fruits of lucrative an office. We are well informed that all of our delegation but one labored hard against this, although ineffectually.

A WORD OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

The importance of Bangor as a business centre is everywhere recognized, and everywhere the people send us encouraging words of congratulation at the awakened spirit of enterprise that is now animating us. In noticing the remarks of a correspondent, that with the proper energy and liberality, Bangor may become the foremost of our Maine cities, the Gospel Banner says:

"We do not see how any man of common sense can successfully dispute the above. Locally, Bangor occupies a position that must extend her, borders and centres her people, if she will put forth all her energies in season, and in 'faith nothing wavering.' Let her emulate Portland in this respect. With the extensive agricultural region of Aroostook spreading North, and the immense lumber trade yet in prospect of that Peacock, if Bangor will employ all her energy in securing facility for transportation for trade, she will ere long become a city of importation and of immense business."

TEMPERANCE RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE MAINE CONFERENCE.

The following resolutions, presented by Rev. J. E. C. Sawyer, editor of the Riverside Press, and the session of the Maine Conference, held at Saccarappa, were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That, assuming it the duty of Christian men to vote, as they pray, and viewing the ballot box as one of the most appropriate and powerful instrumentalities that can be brought to bear in the interest of morality, we will neither vote ourselves, or encourage others to vote, for any candidates, or man—not practically devoted to the cause of prohibition.

Resolved, That the course taken by the Legislature and the Chief Executive of this State, during the past two years, has so crippled and destroyed the influence of Prohibitory law, that it is no longer and not, except in rare instances, and that shockingly prevails such an amount of desolation and crime as must fill with sorrow and indignation the heart of every friend of Temperance.

The following, which was presented during the third of the series, was received:

Resolved, That we look forward with interest to the approaching session of the State Temperance Committee, and give expression to the hope that the results of its deliberations will be the calling of a State Convention, in which all political parties now devolved upon the friends of temperance may be duly considered."

HOW THE COLONIES ARE ACQUIRED.

It should be remembered by those who so glibly propose that Great Britain should hand over those colonies to the United States as a compensation for the Alabama claims, that she did not do so. She so disposed, without the consent of the colonists! Colonists as they are, they are true orthodox Anglo-Saxons, belonging to a sturdy proud and sturdy race of freemen. However hopeless they might appear as the result of a conflict with us, we must take them if they would fight for freedom against a union enforced by threat or coercion, and those who desire to further a connection could not provoke greater obstacle to its accomplishment than by any threats of compulsory subjugation. We appear in the columns of our contemporaries Policy and prudence dictate the course to watch and wait. The end must be if we but bide our time.

The very proposition to give over a people by—to hand over fellow-citizens to the United States is a travesty on the Alabama claims, has been produced not only to feed the American press and people, but for consideration of our position, and they have argued out in their own minds that they cannot be disposed of as so many sheep, have a right to express our opinion as to our future destiny. It would do the people of the provinces of these colonies the resolution to vote for or England and America. The arms of the United States might, and probably would overpower us in this territory, but no practical result would be obtained—the continental idea of annexating England would by that only be strengthened. We cannot be annexed to the States by the sword. A union with the colonies will only be sought by the colonists when they believe it will result to their advantage.—St. John Globe.

FINISHING TOUCH.—SCENE AT WASHINGTON.

The Boston Advertiser has the following special of Monday's news:

There was quite a gathering of persons at the War Department, State Department and the general office of the Western Union Telegraph Company today, to hear the announcement of the junction between the United Pacific and the Central Pacific railroads. At 2:20 P. M., Washington time, all the offices were notified from Omaha to be ready for receiving the signal. New York and the heads of various offices of the company were also notified. Ready! Soon, inquiries from Omaha, in response to numerous inquiries, said: "Be Everybody ready. Keep the circuit, but watch for signals of blows of the hammer." After some little trouble with the Chicago office and the closing of the circuit west of Buffalo, the instrument here was agitated, and Promontory Point, 2400 miles west of Washington, gave notice that the driver was being offered. Then followed an interval of silence, after which the blows of the hammer upon the last spike were distinctly heard, and at 2:47 P. M. came the word "Done," which told of the great feat. The President was directed and the Western Department, but could not get away from his office. General Sherman and all the officers in his department were in the room listening to the signals. The scene at the State Department was equally impressive. Secretary Fish and most of the cabinet subordinates being gathered in the room containing the operating instrument.

The Montreal Star, commenting on the rumor of an approaching visit from Mr. Thornton, the British Minister to the United States, to look into the reports about the desire for annexation, says this language:

"Mr Thornton will see a country, 3000 miles from England, more loyal than the English Conservative, and clinging to the name of a connection which carries as much historical significance as the Rock of Gibraltar, or the Pillars of Hercules. A country with the largest war power in the world, holding the keys which unlock the ocean and the Indian, which open the great gates through which pass the rich manufactures of our country and the corn of another and which commands the great highway between Europe and Asia; a country which, while holding these treasures, like a cockatrice's nest, would give them all for a grain of liberty; a country where all the business is done on credit, where ten per cent. is considered an insolvent annually, where one rides by depopulated farms, whose population is decreasing at the rate of 60,000 a year per million; a country ruled by a government, a bank, and a railway—a Ministry whose policy is Bell and whose Practice is Jobbery, and a host of prominent citizens running to a railway station after a "gallant Day," which is to vanish intensity of 40 miles' circumference. Mr Thornton will find all this phenomenal springing from one cause—British connection."

The New York Times cautions the country not to get "too nearly irons in the fire." It says:

"We have just now in the fire the Canadian, the Cuban iron, the Mexican iron, the West India iron—not to speak of several domestic irons, such as the national debt iron, the reconstruction iron, the internal improvement iron, the Plains-Indian iron, and many more irons, which lie altogether in the fire, and beg in vain for the forging. Or, to take the French figure again, while Mr. Medill begs us to "embrace" Canada, Mr. Banks asks us to embrace Hayti and San Domingo, Mayor Hall to embrace Cuba, Mr. Robinson to embrace Ireland, while many other gentlemen pressingly present many other claims respectively of Crete, the Sandwich Islands, St. Thomas, Sonora, Stanton, Obihuahua, California, Central America, and the Canadian Islands—all to be embraced at once in the march of long-armed Uncle Sam. This multiplicity and urgency is quite confusing—couldn't it be so arranged that we shall have one war and one annexation at a time?"

FROM WASHINGTON.

Washington, May 19.

The National Executive Committee of colored men of the United States, elected by a Convention held in Washington in January last, waited on the President this afternoon to pay their respects and present an address stating they have sent out the appointment of competent and worthy colored men to prominent stations in the Northern States, would, in view of the low to the objections of the South that it is not the wishes to force a policy upon the South that is not acceptable to the North is not willing to accept it.

The interview is represented as pleasant, and that the President assured the Committee that the question involved was one of great importance, and he would therefore give it due consideration.

The Revolution in Cuba.

HAVANA, May 19.

Key West, May 19.

Private letters have been received from rebel sources giving an account of another battle between Spanish troops and insurgents. It took place on the plains of Las Minas. The Spaniards numbered 1,500 and were commanded by General Letona. The revolutionary force was commanded by Gen. Quesada in person. One account says the native Cubans in front prepared for the encounters, and placed a force of American and European volunteers in the rear with orders to fire upon them if they retreated, thus placed between two fires, they fought with desperation. The Spaniards attacked the entrenchment three times, but were repulsed every time. The two first assaults were made by the Cubans; the third was determined and severe, and the Cubans began to waver, when Quesada ordered his command to the front. They advanced, and the Cubans fled in confusion. A hand to hand combat then took place, and the butchery was horrible. The Spaniards finally gained the entrenchments, and retreated. But in this victory their loss is estimated at 150 killed, and that of the Cubans at 300. The most unfortunate number was that of Quesada, after the fight, and General San Miguel and burned the town before the retreating Spaniards.

It is generally believed that the new military leaders have changed the tactics of the rebels, and in future will confine their forces to interesting to the mountains, where any considerable force of Spaniards would be at a disadvantage.

In the battle at Alimas, which took place on the 1st inst, the Spaniards lost 200 and Spanish 100 killed and wounded.

The Spaniards hope to counteract the effect of these actions as fatal to the cause of rebellion, but the Cubans are encouraged by them as the first great successes of the campaign.

Massachusetts Legislature.

BOSTON, May 19.

The bill for annexation of Dorchester to Boston passed the Senate to-day by a large majority.

A proposition was laid before the Legislative Committee on Railroads for the consolidation into one road of the Boston & Lowell, Nashua & Lowell, Northern Railroad, Northern Vermont, Central Ogdensburg Railroads, covering the line between this city and Ogdensburg, N. Y. It is proposed to merge the several corporations into one, to be called the Northern Railroad. This will include the whole class of all the above roads, and limit the capital stock of the consolidated to the capital stock and indebtedness of the several roads and steamboat lines owned by them, which the corporation is empowered to buy. The whole matter is based upon terms mutually to be agreed upon and to be ratified by a majority of the stockholders of each road, at a meeting called for the purpose.

It is understood that all the roads mentioned above are in favor of the consolidation, awaiting upon the matter as a favorable as a future day.

THE RAILROAD WRECK.—The Portland Press gives the following in reference to the terrible accident on Wednesday. As the paper left Portland at 4 P. M. on that day, it could not have had the following Hayes' crossing, about one mile this side of South Berwick Junction, the engineer Mr. Albert Dodge, discovered there was something wrong in the rails a short distance ahead. He reversed his engine and sounded the alarm "down brake," which instantly brought the brakemen to their work. But they had scarcely taken one turn at the brake before the engine ran off the track, the baggage car, mail car, smoking car, and two passenger cars following it. The engine ran along some little distance until it came to a culvert, when it went up and over, smashing it badly.

The baggage car followed the engine and was smashed up, as were the postal and smoking cars. Two passenger cars were wrecked, but not so badly as the others.

Mr. Freeman Lamprey, baggage master on the Eastern railroad, was terribly injured, his ribs being all crushed in. He lived about one hour after the accident. Albert Dodge, the engineer, was badly scalded, but hopes are entertained that he will recover. Joseph Read, a brakeman, was badly injured while engaged at his post. Charles Grant, a brakeman, received some slight injuries. The only passenger seriously injured was Mrs. E. A. Stevens, of Saco. She was sitting in a car holding a child when the accident occurred. She suffered a fracture of both bones below the knees. The child escaped unhurt. A gentleman whose name could not be ascertained, had one leg broken, and a girl suffered some severe contusions. Mr. York, who was in the postal car, suffered some bruises. He found himself very suddenly mixed up with the mails, his car broken all to pieces. Mr. Brunel, the Eastern Express messenger, received a thorough shaking, and had his clothes almost stripped from his body. In the smoking car there were six gentlemen, all of whom received bruises and wrenches.

As soon as intelligence was received by telegraph in Portland of the accident, Mr. Chase, the Superintendent, fitted out a wrecking train, and went out where it occurred. All the attention it was possible to pay the injured persons was freely bestowed, both by the passengers who were not injured as well as by the officers of the road. Mr. Payson Tucker, the conductor, was indefatigable in his exertions for their relief, and Mr. Chase, after he arrived there, seconded Mr. Tucker's exertions.

The cause of the accident is attributed by the engineer, to some persons tampering with the rails. The spikes in the chairs of two of the rails were found drawn and thrown aside, and the rails appear to have been moved. If the rails were tampered with, it must have been done after 5 o'clock in the morning, as the train that left Portland at 6:15 A. M. passed over the same place safely. Another theory is that the extreme heat warped the rails and threw them out of line. This is the most serious accident that has ever occurred on the Portland, Saco & Portsmouth Railroad.

—A little son of Mr. John D. Lord, of Portland, was seriously injured on Tuesday by being run over by a wagon, c

LOCAL AND MAINE ITEMS.

CHORAL FESTIVAL—THIRD DAY. At the Music yesterday was presented a most attractive programme which included an Overture, a Concert Waltz and the favorite Golden Robin Polka, with Piccolo Duett by Messrs. Goering and Bethel, by the Gur magic Song by Miss Otis—Song of Spring Song by Mr. Winch—The Va Song by Mr. Whitney—I think g Tyrolean Song encored, Mr. Whitney gave Quintet Song, Quartette, by Mr. Mrs. Tufts, Mr. Whitney and Mr Alpine Echo; Clarinet Solo by Mr. Robert, and Piano Solo by Mr. The whole performance was ap thoroughly good and gave the greate of success. The fine orchestra of the Chorus, which made its first appearance at the Festival, and received in this city, were also welcome.

The closing performances consisted wholly of Mendelssohn's grand Oratorio of St. Paul, with Miss Gates, Mrs. Wasgatt and Miss Whitney and Winch, as Soloists, and the Chorus of the Festival, supported by the Germania Orchestra. As was the case in which their several parts were rendered. The audience manifested their appreciation of the performance by frequent and hearty applause. The variety with which the Oratorio was rendered, and the intense interest of the performance, from the great programme and the general good taste evinced will be long remembered by those who had the pleasure of attending the Festival. Much credit is due to Mr. Hayford & Webster, the choir of Bangor.

—W. H. Knight, of East Machias, has recently taken out a patent for a mowing machine.

—On motion of S. D. Leavitt, Esq., of Eastport, on the 9th inst., Nicholas Richardson, of Eastport, was admitted to practice in the Washington County Bar.

PERSONAL. The Gospel Banner says: Hon. Lot M. Morrill returned from Virginia on Thursday last. Tuesday, since he had been for the last three weeks attending an important law case, involving some eight hundred thousand to one million dollars worth of real estate, which, owned by a company of which Mr. Morrill is one of the principal members. E. P. Pillsbury, Esq., had charge of the case, which was decided fully in favor of the company. Mr Morrill is in the health and spirits and many of his friends hereabout, while they regret the circumstances that exclude him from the United States Senate, are entirely reconciled to the genial repose at his home and in the walks of social life.

—Active steps are being taken in Aroostook county in Lowell, in order for the act of the last Legislature, over the Journal

—The Evangelist says that Mrs. Caroline E. Brown, of Waterford, mother of the late Charles F. Brown, more widely known as "Artemus Ward," after waiting long, by the advice of friends, for the public to erect a monument, over the grave of her son, and feeling mortified that there is nothing to mark his resting place, has determined to put up a grave stone at her own expense. In furtherance of this object the editor of the Evangelist has transmitted to her the sum of $31.50, principal and interest, placed in his hands, as contributions toward the erection of a monument. Mrs Brown has never received a cent from the property of her son.

—A coin named James Black, residing near Ivy Reservoir, On Work in Cape Elizabeth, an employee at the Rolling Mills, returning from Portland about 10 o'clock Saturday evening, fell from one of the piers at the draw of Vaughan's Bridge and was drowned. He leaves a wife and four children, who have been residing in Pembroke, and were to come in the same boat from Eastport on the day. The Press says the coroner's jury in the case found that the deceased was in a state of intoxication when he fell overboard, and thus came to his death.

—The Lewiston Journal says that Willie, son of Addison Small, Esq., of Auburn, was run over by a rapid driven horse and sulky on Hampshire street, Auburn, Monday evening about 5 o'clock and severely injured about the head—the bruise affecting the brain so as to render him for some time past insane. We are happy to learn that to day he seems in a fair way to recover.

—The Bowdoin Senior have chosen the following class officers: President, Parsons Call; Chaplain, Clarence Hale; Marshal, George W. Hale; Orator, Hiram Tuell; Poet, G. Frank Mosher; Chronicler, John C. Chamberlain; Prophet, Everett Bothrop; Address at the Tree, E. P. Payson; Odist, O. P. A. Greene.

—We learn from the Press that Mr Stephenson, the old cashier of the Second National Bank of Portland, has resigned.

—The dead body of an infant child several weeks old, was found near Lisbon Village, Cape Elizabeth, on Tuesday, as we learn from the Press.

—In their race for bonds and territory, in the neighborhood of Salt Lake, the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroad companies graded two roads for 50 miles side by side, occasionally crossing one another. That of the Union Pacific was accepted by the government, and the bond for it issued to that company; but they agreed the same thing required to sell it to the Central Pacific—so that, while the actual point of meeting in construction is Promontory Point, at the head of Salt Lake, the real point of union in ownership and running is Ogden, some 50 to 60 miles this side, and far down the Salt Lake valley.

—The vigilance committee of Byrnn, Wyoming Territory, called upon a desperate character a short time since and gave him fifteen minutes to leave town. He mounted his mule and said "Gentlemen, if this d—d mule don't balk, I don't want but five."

The Marriage Broker of Paris.

...ial office, established at Paris ... an extract ... conviction, Monsieur, that ... know of some one prevented ... ing marriage in accordance ... position, on account of ... pleasure ... by this of the following ... have the honor of being ... the ... ble prince, well known in ... circle ... and irreproachable ... of age, and with a for... to 1,000,000 francs.

... 35 years, and fortune ... francs.

... doctors from 21 to 33 years, ... to 60,000 francs.

... merchants from 25 to 45 ... 20,000 to 30,000 francs.

... married proprietors, from 40 ... 50,000 to 100,000 francs.

... establishments all that ... candles, brunettes, rich, ... large, small, noisy, thin, to suit every ... taste. His numerous connections assure ... to his articles the highest superiority.

The counter-clerk industry has disappeared ... but left many successors. ... The advertisements vary—one can choose ... from a thousand to five hundred thousand ... francs; from fifteen years of age to seventy. ... A young lady having a fortune of ... 30,000 francs desires marriage with a person ... of honorable profession and possessed of a high moral character. Address ... Avenue Montaigne." One day an unfortunate lover whelmed with debts, presented ... himself to dispose one of the pretended ... fortunes of five thousand francs per year. After receiving explanations, the broker demanded, according to his custom, two hundred francs for expenses. He shrugged his shoulders, and replied: "Do you suppose I would marry if I had two hundred francs?"

Spendthrifts who have squandered their fortunes, and need a dowry to replace them, can read in the papers an advertisement for a handsome, modest and amiable young lady with a dowry of 3,000 francs a year. They hasten to write, and two days after receive a response, and with it a hand trembling with emotion they open his Capid's missive, which says that such business cannot be done by correspondence; to begin the affair at once, assuming them that theirs being the first communication, they will have the preference. They imagine the fortune already theirs. The bureau is generally situated on the fourth floor. After being introduced you enter into a magnificent saloon, ornamented with exquisite taste, from whose open doors you perceive a succession of rich apartments. Here Cupid reigns supreme. All the paintings, statuettes, mirrors and coverings are of the most costly. Two pretty children (hired without doubt) are playing in the room. After being kept waiting a short time, the broker appears, and excuses himself, upon the plea of business, for making you wait, after which he rings, and with an insinuating smile, begs to offer you a glass of wine.

When the suitor, valet appears he dresses his establishment at seeing him perform this horrible and demands, with an angry air, where is Pierre, Antoine, Francois. His answers without hesitation one has gone to the bank, another to the opera to engage a stage for Madame, and the third for the theatre of the Count. This deception is intended to make an impression. The valet is the only servant of the establishment, who even the fabulous sum of six hundred francs could not induce to lie. All the children in the saloon. This is only the prologue—now the comedy commences.

Monsieur, I have had the honor of addressing you in answer to the advertisement. Have I been deceived in this lady? You are without profession? Yes—she is honorable then? Your antecedents? You shall be informed of them. The conversation continues thus, in order that the broker may form an idea of the degree of intelligence of his victim, and what precautions to take to prevent compromising himself. I shall expect only five per cent. upon the dowry. Very well. Payable when you receive it, Admirable. But hurry going further the broker demands the face of the bureau, the expenses incurred in making inquiries, &c., which vary according to the credibility of the visitor and the amount of the dowry. He asks for five hundred francs, adding that with a hundred more you will have the right of choosing for six months from all the ladies of my establishment. Such a tempting offer could not be resisted—so the applicant gives the five hundred francs. In exchange for his money he receives a receipt upon stamped paper with the terms of their agreement—for which he must pay ten francs extra—510 francs.

He waits with impatience the moment of the first interview, at last the broker presents him. The lady is escorted by her aunt. They are mutually pleased, and after a short interchange of compliments they leave the room. He wishes to escort them to their carriage; this the broker prevents, as they belong to the establishment, being hired for five francs per day and elegant dresses and articles of the toilet necessary for their transformation (for they are blondes or brunettes, according to the taste of the dupe,) are furnished by the broker. Monsieur thinks softly that it is a good idea to invite them to a breakfast at his house, for at table they can converse freely, and after that you will be invited to visit them. For this breakfast of four persons he asks sixty francs, which is nothing as he has the wines of which he makes no account, with friends—370 francs. At breakfast the table is supplied with large joints of cold meats and a splendid turkey, of which the ladies refuse to partake when they are offered the slightest morsel, and for two reasons—first, that a wife who eats little is an advantage, and secondly, that they have repast with some of other victims. Upon some pretext the ladies leave the table, as they recollect an engagement at the Bois de Boulogne, &c. The broker softly informs him that he must soud to this private place to make inquiries about him, and requests him to call the next day and arrange this matter, which he accordingly does, and there meets accidently the lady and her aunt.

A clerk is called who is to make the necessary inquiries. The applicant must pay the expenses of the journey which will amount to two hundred and forty francs. He hesitates. The aunt very naturally declares that she will pay one-half, and to set the example draws out an elegant silk purse which she says is the work of her niece. The latter begs her to offer it to him—he accepts it, and as it is necessary to strike while the iron is hot, the clerk leaves immediately—710 francs. During the clerk's absence he visits the agency, but does not meet the ladies. The broker reminds him of the gift of the purse, and wishing to make a return, he gives a brilliant of two hundred and fifty francs—950 francs. The clerk, (who has doubtless Paris) has been taken suddenly ill on his journey, which has lasted four days and costs eighty francs—1040 francs. Finally the applicant becomes impatient, but the broker informs him, with an air of deepest grief, that he must consider himself very fortunate—that his visitor has saved him from the great misfortune which menaced him—that he has just learned that the father of the young girl is condemned to the galleys for life—that she is unworthy of him. He leaves, congratulating himself upon his escape. The tricks of every description, leaving room for another.

Boston Commercial Bulletin.

The Northmen in Maine.

BY JOSEPH WILLIAMSON, ESQ., BELFAST, MAINE.

It is a well established fact that settlements were made on the banks of the Kennebec river, at no early period, that no account of their origin, except in tradition or obscure narrative. Judge Sullivan, in his History of Maine, written in 1795, says that the remains of a blacksmith's forge were discovered at Pownal Falls, now Waterville, when the troops of the Government went there, in the year 1754, to build Fort Halifax. There is a point he continues about twenty-seven miles from the head of navigation, on the east bank of the Sebasticook, a branch of the Kennebec, where, within six years now last past, the owner, intended to form a brick-kiln; set his people to dig for clay; when they had removed the soil, they found the remains of an ancient kiln, with mouldered or decayed brick. There was a hemlock tree upon the kiln which stood, of more than two feet in diameter.

A few years since, I received from a reliable old gentleman of this State, an account of some vestiges of these early settlements. He informed me, that nearly half a century ago, Mr. Francis Fuller, of Winthrop, Maine, stated that during the second or third year after the close of the French War of 1756, he was as a ship carpenter's apprentice to the Kennebec, to assist in building a vessel for Dr. Silvester Gardiner, that the place selected for the purpose was Agry's Point in what is now the town of Pittston, about three miles below the present city of Gardiner, where a small mill stream, called Cobbossecontee, makes a confluence with the Kennebec. The spot was then covered with large trees; clearing a space for the ship yard, and removing the underwood, the bottom of a brick chimney was discovered. Further examination brought to light the remains of thirteen other chimneys. Upon which the Columbus discovered America.

This interesting communication induced me to visit Agry's Point for the purpose of examining the locality and of meeting with some old inhabitants of that vicinity, several of whom corroborated the statements of Mr. Fuller. The owner and occupier of the land stated that he had ploughed up brick, in a range from east to west, and that the proprietor of a mill on the mouth of the Sebasticook had informed him that in digging a cellar for his house, where he had seen the brick, and a peculiarly-formed stone mill, of which Mr. Fuller has been possessed of the Northmen, and of which he has given an account in a work now in the press.

These vestiges of remote antiquity, with other incidents of the Norse discovery of the Mississippi valley, have long since engaged my attention, and although the evidence of an early settlement is of a description likely to escape the attention of the casual observer, and the Icelandic and Norse Sagas make no mention of the permanent occupation, during the time of the Northmen's visit, of the country, in which they found the vine growing wild, yet the following passage from the Saga of Thorfinn Karlsefne, who passed the winter of 1006-7 within a few miles of Agry's Point, would lead to the belief that they had made a permanent settlement. "Karlsefne and his people had not been long there before one morning early they saw a great number of skin canoes rowing from the south round the point which formed the headland opposite to the island, and so many canoes that the bay looked as if it were sown with coals, and all the canoes had poles which they waved about. Karlsefne ordered his people to raise a red shield, and they did so, and held it against the strangers when they landed. They were astonished at the sight of the men, and then came rowing past them, and went to the place on the headland. Here they left their canoes, and with great astonishment looked at the men, and then went by themselves to the dwellings, but the doors could not stand open for them. In the houses were many kinds of wares. There was the greatest quantity of furs, and all sorts of valuable articles. They saw no trade or money. Then they carried their burdens into the houses and went away again, and proceeded to the south round the point."

The question then arises, who were the originators of these settlements? Whence came and whither went they? Did any of them remain in the country? Following the theory of Professor Rafinn, that the men who visited Vinland in the eighteen hundred years ago, were Norwegian navigators, yet while it is clear as to the American Continent, a single suggestion may be permitted.

After the supposed discovery of the northern portion of our Continent, by an Icelandic voyager, in 986, the Icelandic annals for 999, with thirty-five companions, undertook a voyage of discovery for the lands which the former had seen, having seen. Passing Newfoundland, which they named Helluland, and Nova Scotia which they called Markland, they again sailed for it to the north-west-by-west, and coasted for two days, before they made land. They then came to an island, which lay to the eastward of the main land, and after a short passage between this island and a promontory projecting in a northerly direction from the main land. They sailed westwardly; and, after two days, they reached Land, and, sailing westwardly along the northern coast towards the west of four days, they went on shore. Where they left their ships, and from thence into the river, and from thence into the lake, where they cast anchor. Here they constructed some temporary huts, which afterwards when they had made a voyage to the eastward, they found to be their homes. A German who accompanied Thorfinn on this voyage, found wild vines and grapes, which he recognized from having seen similar ones in his own country. Leif gave the name of Vinland from this discovery.

It does not require much aid from the imagination to identify the island on the eastward of the main, as Monhegan, while the river which, rising in Canada, flows into the sea, is well represented by the Kennebec, which forms the eastern boundary of Merry-meeting Bay, forming the confluence of the Androscoggin and Kennebec, as it corresponds to the latitude of Vinland, as it was described.

It may be regretted by some that the Northmen did not remain on Monhegan, and build a permanent settlement, but the supposition is natural one that it was in the power of the natives, at the time Leif and his companions visited it, to drive them off, and that in the autumn and winter, on account of the severity of the climate, or the cold, they left it.

Although the accounts of the cold and mild winters are not inconsistent with our present climate, it may be by many years, and not by many centuries. De Mosny, who visited the Island of Iceland in 1752, speaks of grain as ripening there, and that they were in the habit of drying it on the rocks. In Iceland, that is the Island of the Island of Iceland.

These vestiges of remote antiquity, with other incidents of the Norse discovery of the Mississippi valley, have long since engaged my attention, and although the evidence of an early settlement is of a description likely to escape the attention of the casual observer, and the Icelandic and Norse Sagas make no mention of the permanent occupation, during the time of the Northmen's visit, of the country, in which they found the vine growing wild, yet the following passage from the Saga of Thorfinn Karlsefne, who passed the winter of 1006-7 within a few miles of Agry's Point, would lead to the belief that they had made a permanent settlement.
